Building a Culture of Respect in the Workplace

Presented by Dennis Eisenbarth

Building a respectful workplace is essential for your organization to grow and flourish. In a respectful workplace, all people have the right to be treated with dignity and respect. But respect goes far beyond legally defined protected rights. Employees feel valued by their employers. Productivity is high, conflict is low and business interests thrive. Even in difficult times such as terminations or discipline, a respectful approach by an employer may assist employees to move forward, accept workplace situational change and may avoid expensive litigation or workflow disruption. An organization where respect is a fundamental work value is a place where people want to work!

Understanding Diversity in the Workplace

Presented by Gobinder Gill

The definition of diversity in any given situation depends on who you ask. People define the concept based on their individual backgrounds and upbringing. As a result, these definitions are as numerous as the individuals defining it. In today's workplace, there needs to be a consistent definition to facilitate a harmonious work environment. The talk will assist an organization to define and develop a diversity policy based on a more thorough understanding of the many facets of diversity.

Respect in the Workplace

Presented by Gobinder Gill

In today's diverse workplace is a reflection of North American society at large. Often we see a wide range of behaviors that display a lack of respect and politeness, both inside and outside the workplace. Various polls and studies have highlighted that workers view impoliteness as a serious issue which must be dealt with. As the workforce becomes even more diverse than it is now, it is important that each employee develops an awareness of respectful behavior and necessary skills. When this happens, it is then anticipated that employees could serve as role models. Hopefully, these behaviors will spread in the workplace and create cultural harmony.
